

Chorey

This is an app that assigns chores to members in a group or family. The users get reminded of certain chores that are assigned to them and when they complete them they can get rewards.

How do parents get their children to do chores, without the need to remind them?

Features include:

- Lists of common chores that can be assigned by a captain.
- The chores could also be assigned randomly
- Time limit for completion
- Users (kids) are rewarded for completion and maybe more if done early
- Rewards can be customized, $$$, candy, toys etc..

Problems:

- Not everyone has kids or a group that needs things done.
- Not all kids would have access to a smartphone for notifications and access to the app.
- If in a household with roommates how to get everyone to use the app.

Key Findings-

Do you have kids that can help you with chores?

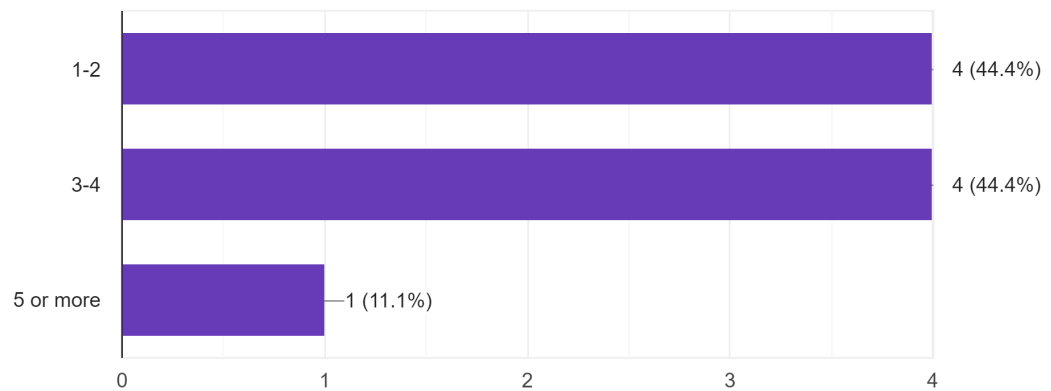

9 responses

My main reasoning for the app was for families with children. Everyone who answered the survey had no children.

How many chores would you like to be done daily?

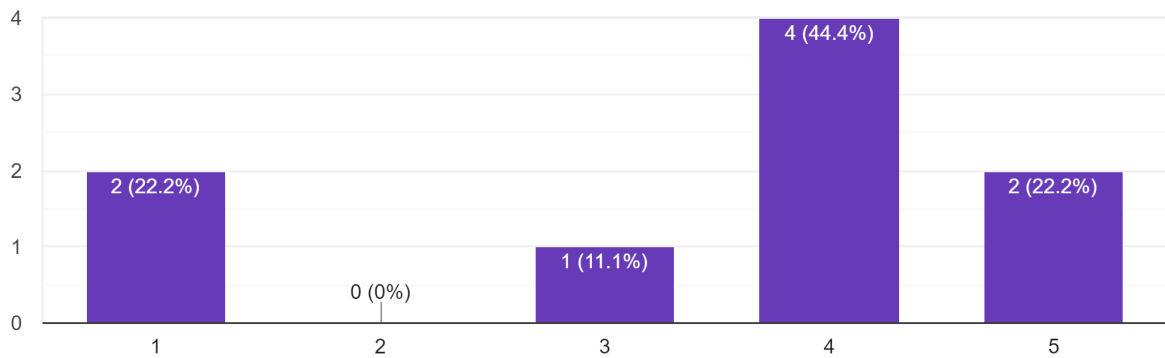

9 responses

More than half of the people that responded had more than 3 chores to do daily. Which lets me know there's usually more than 1-2 that need to be done daily.

Do you think rewarding the people in your house for doing chores would help get them done?

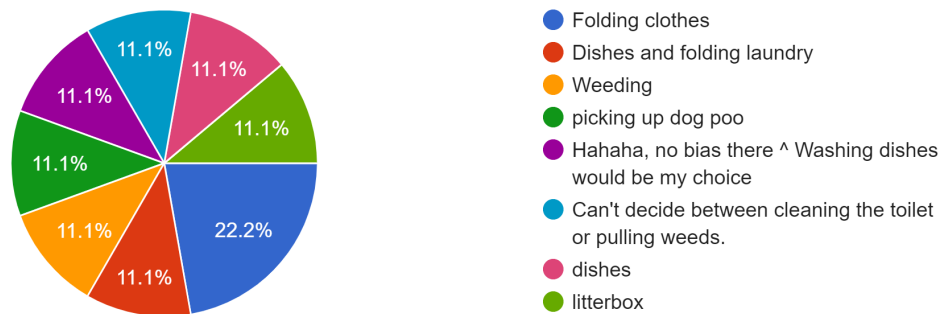

9 responses

90% of the people would like help to do these chores and the majority think a reward system would help get them done.

What is your most hated chore to do?

I was surprised that not everyone hated folding laundry the most))

I didn't really find the answer to the question I needed the most which was would kids do the chores if there was a reward in doing them. I would need to send a survey to a broader audience and not just younger students. However most do think if there was some kind of reward for completing them then they'd get done. I would probably need to create a better survey with questions about housemates.

Obviously everyone 100% has chores to do daily, and would like it if they got help with them. With some better survey questions I might be able to think of better features that would appeal to a younger crowd. Also there are things that people do daily like dishes, and making the bed.
